47% of total respondents say their companies fully integrate sustainability into strategy; more than half of this are board of directors and management perspective.

However, 7% of total respondents say none of the above which may reflect that the companies are facing challenges in adopting sustainability in business strategy.

In the midst of volatile and uncertain economic condition, organizations are facing challenges that can present both threats and opportunities. Therefore, business adaptability becomes vital in ensuring sustainable growth under intense competition environment. Emphasizing only growth and financial return under capitalism concept do not correspond with the path of sustainable growth. In some cases, businesses were stalled because they failed to take into account environmental and social impact right from the start.
